We may live without love, we may live without books, But civilized man cannot live without COGNAC.

And our cooks cannot cook without the materials necessary to constitute meals. Those materials, in order to produce good, wholesome food, must be of the best quality. To procure them of the desired quality we must go to the right place for them. The right place, as every one familiar with the subject will tell you, is Jacoby's!

What he hasn't got in the way of first-class, high-grade materials for good, wholesome, delicious food—"fit for the gods" themselves—you might put in a wheelbarrow. What he has not can scarcely be learned without visiting that wonderful place, where he keeps enough of everything good to eat to victual a warship or supply an army, and inspecting the enormous variety of household supplies of every imaginable description, displayed so that every purchaser can select at will, and all of the choicest and best to be found in any market.

This is no flight of fancy, but the plain, unvarnished truth. If you doubt it, go to 114 to 120 East Government street and be convinced.
